This module explores research in the arts at the intersection of artistic practice, theory, and scholarly research. It introduces key histories, theories, and methodological approaches in artistic research and examines how different forms of knowledge can emerge through artistic practice. A particular focus is placed on methodological pluralism, interdisciplinary and transdisciplinary approaches, and the relationship between research questions, methods, and artistic practice. Participants apply these perspectives to their own doctoral projects, critically reflect on their methodological and disciplinary positioning, and develop approaches for further research.
